Sariah's Ode to Cheville
sung to tune of Cheville's House Song

The men of Cheville just love to play football.
They always go out to win.
But when they played their sister house
They all went out to sin.

Chorus

Cheville's HP is good ole Doc
He's really built with muscle.
He asked out Sariah's Diane Doty
But she never would hustle.

Chorus

Bruce Graham is chaplain of this fine house.
He always prays alot.
He says he prays for his house brothers
Who have all gone to pot.

Chorus

One of Sariah's freshman girls
Likes a man in Cheville
She watched him so hard last nite at dinner
That All of her food she did spill.

Chorus

On one dark nite the men of Cheville.
Decided to serenade
They went to Walker and found Sariah
And made a panty raid.

Chorus

The men of Y Cheville, so strong and righteous
Decided to do something nice.
They asked out Sariah to South Campus.
And then were as frigid as ice.

Chorus

The men of Cheville are gentlemen
They always are so polite.
One picked up his date for the evening
He told her she was a sight.

The

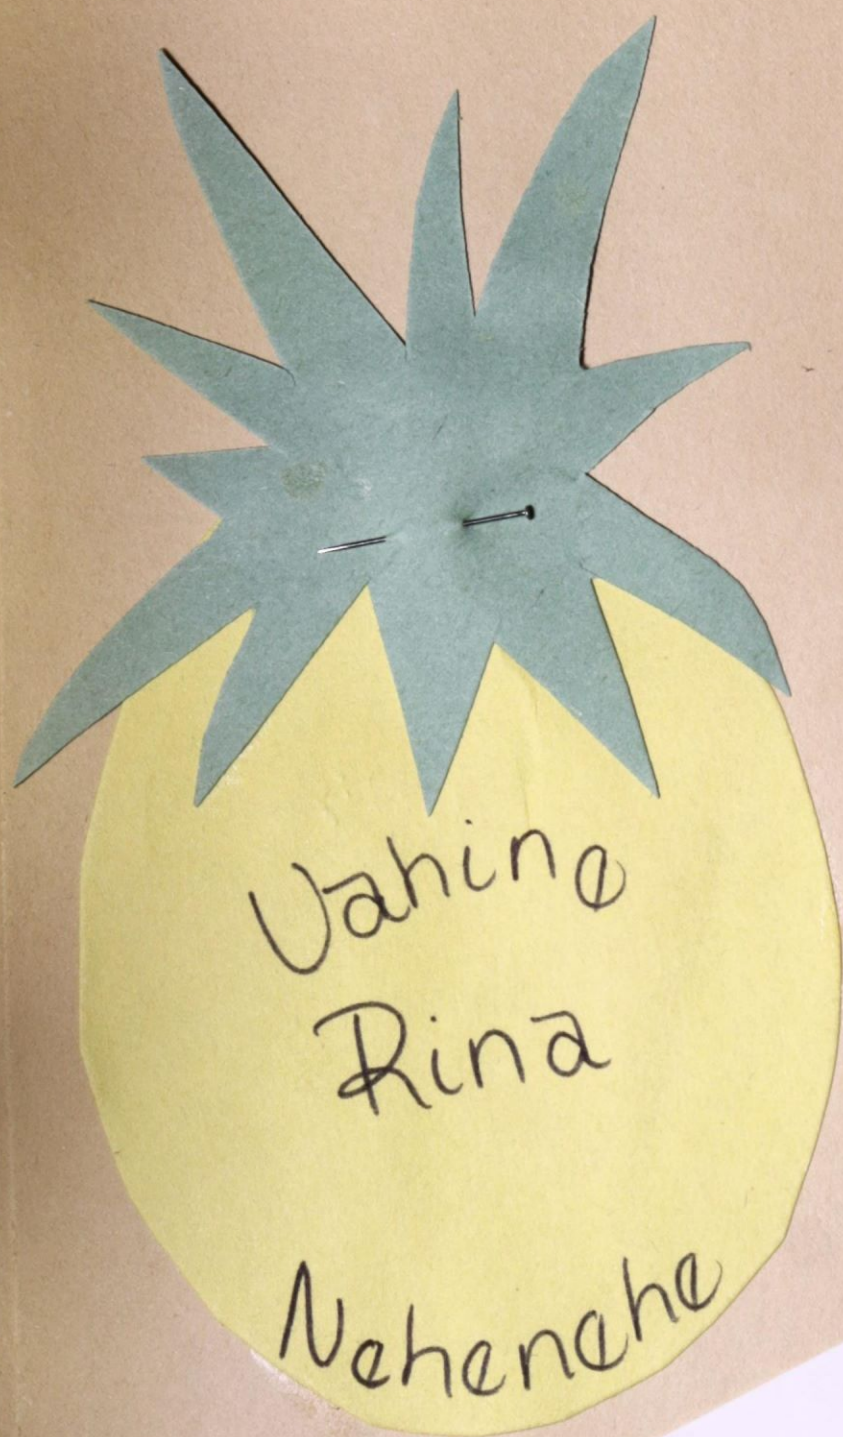

Chorus

The girls of Sariah have made a conclusion
About the men of Cheville
It is that Cheville has no equal
Anywhere on the Hill.

Thanks!

Dear Sacred Women,
Just a note to say thanks
again for another year's
Christmas gift to the campus.
In the first place, your production of "The Littlest Angel" was beautiful. I even cried a couple of tears (which I just let run down my cheeks because I was ashamed to brush them
away), but most of all, thanks for your sentiment which expresses itself as "your gift to the campus." This is the real spirit of Christmas.
My love,
Grace Belling

THE MOUSE WHO DIDN'T BELIEVE IN SANTA CLAUS

(The clock stands in the corner, a moonbeam floats idly on the floor, and a little gray mouse comes from the hole in the corner and frisks and scampers in the light of the moon beam up in the floor)

"Ah, me!" sighed the old clock, "how different mice are now-a-days from the mice we used to have in the old times! Now there was your grandmother, Mistress Velvet-paw, and there was your grandfather, Master Sniffwhisker-- how grave and dignified they were! Many a night have I seen them dancing upon the carpet below me, but always that stately minuet and never the crazy frisking which you are executing now to my surprise! and to my horror! "

"But why shouldn't I be merry?" asked the little mouse, "tomorrow is Christmas, and this is Christmas Eve."

"So it is, " said the old clock, "I had really forgotten all about it, But, tell me, what is Christmas to you, little Miss Mouse?"

"A great deal to me!" cried the little mouse, "I have been very good for a very long time; I have not used any bad words, nor have I gnawed any holes, nor have I stolen any canary seed, nor have I worried my mother by running behind the flour barrel where that horrid trap is set. In fact, I have been so good that I'm very sure Santa Claus will bring me something very pretty."

This seemed to amuse the old clock mightily; in fact the old clock fell to laughing so heartily that in an unguarded moment she struck twelve a minute before--which was exfeedingly careless.

"Why my dear, I remember many moons ago when an ancestor of yours didn't even believe in Santa Claus," said the old clock.

"Oh really!?" exclaimed the little mouse. "Oh do tell me about it!"

"Well, ... Her name was Squeaknibble. They say that she took after your ancestors who came from New England, and seemed to inherit many ancestral traits, the most conspicuous of which was a disposition to sneer at some of the most respected dogmas in mousedom.. From her very infancy she doubted, for example, the widely accepted theory that the moon was composed to green cheese; and this heresy was the first intimation her parents had of her skeptical turn of mind. Of course, her parents were vastly annoyed, for they say that this youthful skepticism would lead to serious, if not fatal consequences."

"For a long time Squeaknibble would not believe that there was any such archfiend as a cat; but she came to be convinced one memorable night, on which occasion she lost a whole foot of her beautiful tail, and received so terrible a fright that for fully an hour after-ward her little heart beat very violently!"
